are two of the types of picnics offered.

Sandy said most customers appreciate cleanliness and the service offered by Triple G.

Triple G began as a family juggling operation in 1966. Donald Graybill, one of the three brothers who makes up the "triple" says they decided to go into juggling because, "We felt we weren't getting a fair price for milk. There were quite a few jugglers in Pennsylvania — it was a profitable thing then, but our costs keep going up."

Arthur and Irvin are the two brothers who make up the partnership with Donald and who still operate the farms and market. The brothers milk about 190 cows and the milk processing is still done on the premises, and customers enjoy paying jigger prices at the supermarket.

Brian Nissly, supermarket manager, says they process 5,500 gallons of milk weekly. They bottle their milk in durable, clear plastic returnable bottles. Nissly says people prefer the clear plastic to cartons. They also offer non-returnable plastic as an option to their customers.

They make their own ice cream, and an ice cream parlor adjoining the store does a big business in both cones and packaged ice cream. The parlor also offers a luncheon menu. Triple G makes about 30 flavors of ice cream, processing two days a week.

With their small juggling operation, the Graybill brothers offered a small line of convenience groceries. Donald says they expanded to the supermarket "so we could offer more of our farm products." The present farm market was built in 1977 and was expanded about two years ago.

He said they feel they are providing a service for the Denver-Roomstown area offering one of the widest varieties of products.

Promoting milk goes along with their grocery line. They run promotions during June Dairy Month, but this month had a cheese promotion going in the lobby of the supermarket where they often offer specials. A cow is a standard fixture in the lobby, offering kids the chance to climb on it, hug and kiss it. When they move the cow to another area, Nissly says children wonder where it is.

Brian states, "We try to serve our customers to the best of our ability."

For most of us, Fashtnacht Day means the opportunity for a sweet treat. For Triple G Farms, it means a lot of planning, lots of extra work and the good feeling which comes from offering the public a taste of what it wants. In this case, a delicious taste of pre-Lenten indulgence
