

Purina funds research

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — Six graduate students in agricultural colleges have been named recipients of Ralston Purina Company Research Fellowships, announced W.M. Jones, President of Purina Mills, Inc., a subsidiary of Ralston Purina. Each Fellowship, worth $6,400, will be applied to the 1985-86 academic year.

"The purpose of our Fellowship program, which began in 1949, is to help train outstanding graduate students for leadership positions in the critically important areas of livestock and poultry science," Jones says. "The awards reflect the value we place on agriculture youth, who will be tomorrow's agriculture leaders."

Recipients in the field of Dairy Science are: Kimberly A. Cassida of Penn State University, James K. Drackley of Iowa State University and Roberto D. Sainz of the University of California at Davis. In the field of Animal Science, Donald W. Gesting of the University of Illinois and Joseph D. Jerry of Penn State University and in the field of Poultry Science, Beth Anne Davison of the University of Maryland.

"As the premiere company serving the needs of American agriculture, we feel it is important that we support today's livestock and poultry producer in every way we can," Jones concludes. "These recipients will help do just that."

Smiling in defeat

Vaughn King, right, of Delmarva North, Perdue, Inc., is a good loser. Smiling broadly, he accepts the "horse's tail" award to the worst chicken plucker in the Delmarva Chicken Plucking Contest. Presented by Kurt Schuster, Intervet, chairman of the event, the plaque was provided by the Waukesha Rubber Co.

Otto Lange, right, of Buyers' Marketing Service, Salisbury, Md., claimed his fourth chicken plucking championship during a competition staged at the 37th Delmarva Chicken Festival. Kurt Schuster, Intervet, Millsboro, Del., chairman of the festival's Chicken Capers, congratulates the winner and presents the trophy by Waukesha Rubber Co., Inc., Waukesha, Wis.
