Coyote kills reported in Clearfield County

HARRISBURG — Pennsylvania farmers have had problems with deer, bear, racoons and even elk. But, for the first time, farmers in western Pennsylvania have a new critter to deal with — the eastern coyote.

A coyote was tracked on the Kunes sheep near Frenchville, Clearfield County, where it killed 20 of their sheep at the rate of one every few nights. The method of kill by grabbing the throat and the distinctive tracks led the Kunes and area officials to believe the culprit was a coyote rather than a dog.

Timothy and Gail Kunes contacted the Pennsylvania State Grange, who immediately prompted action from the Pennsylvania Game Commission. The Commission brought in an expert trapper from Lancaster County to set the traps that finally caught the 35 pound female coyote.

Although the coyote is the first to be killed in Clearfield County, they have been sighted in Clearfield and other counties. The Game Commission predicts the animals may become more abundant in the area.

Since coyote kills are a rarity, there is currently no indemnity program either under dog law or Game Commission regulations to reimburse the Kunes for their losses. They estimate their costs exceed $1,000.

The State Grange expects to develop policy on coyote damage at their 113th annual state convention in Warren starting Oct. 27.
