Teach Children the Danger of Charcoal Fires

Most children know that they should not touch a kitchen range. Now that the cookout season has arrived, make certain you extend that lesson to include outdoor cooking fires as well.

Young children are often the victims of outdoor cooking accidents, and many of these involve charcoal. Keep children and pets away from the grills. And do not allow children to help build or extinguish fires. Save that until they are older.

Remember an innocent looking gray ash on a charcoal briquet hides a very hot fire.

Here are a few safety tips for adults: Before starting a fire, make sure your grill is sturdy and on solid ground so it will not tip over. Never use a starter fluid on a fire that is already burning, even if you cannot see flames. Flare-ups have caused many serious burns.

Only use approved starter fluids. Never use gasoline, kerosene, lighter fluid, or fuel oil. They are all very dangerous.

Finally, remember Smokey Bear's warning, no matter where you are, make sure your fire is dead before you leave the area. Soak the fire and the ground around it with water.

Want to Keep Beverage Costs Down? Try Water

If you are feeling the pocketbook pinch these days, family beverages might be one area where you can cut costs. One way may be to substitute good old water for soda pop, sweetened punch and other in-between meal summertime drinks.

Water is probably the cheapest drink available, and the best thirst quencher. Next time you take a break and sit down for a drink, think about why you chose what you are drinking and what it costs.

Was taste, calorie content, convenience, or habit a factor in your decision? Would a glass of water be just as satisfying? If not, why not?

Don't ignore drinking milk and fruit juice. They provide good nutrition as well as calories which might give you a lift. To cut the cost, take your refreshments with you to work. A vacuum bottle will keep milk or juice cold. It is cheaper to pour from a large container than to buy an individual container from a vending machine. If you have finished your beverage and are still thirsty, have a drink of cold, clear water.

During warm weather, keep a pitcher of water in the refrigerator. Whenever someone is thirsty, suggest a big cool glass of ice water. It is inexpensive and refreshing.

Get in the habit of drinking water during the day. Use your breaks to restore your energy with a brisk walk or some quick exercises. They can be more restful and invigorating than a glass of punch or soda. Save money and improve your health!

Don't Cry Over Spilled Milk

If while driving home from the grocery store, the milk is spilled don't panic! Clean it up quickly.

Use a sponge to soak up milk. Dry the carpet or upholstery by cleaning with a vacuum cleaner designed to tolerate moisture. Make a 50 percent solution of quaternary ammonium sanitizer, available at dairy supply stores. When dry, sprinkle the spot with baking soda. Vacuum after 24 hours. If baking soda does not completely remove the odor, try sprinkling the carpet or upholstery with kitty litter.

Avoid sanitizers such as chlorine or iodine which may kill the odor-causing bacteria, because they will bleach the colors from your carpet or upholstery.
