John Deere 300/400 Series Tractors

Our frames separate the tractors from the toys

Just about anybody can make a tractor that cuts grass. And nearly everyone does, it seems.

But the mark of a real tractor is not only how well it mows. But how it handles heavy-duty endeavors. And many brands don't.

John Deere 300 and 400 Series are legitimate lawn and garden tractors that can load, till, blade and remove snow. Thanks to full-length welded steel frames. And C-channel siderails that won't twist under stress.

Nothing Runs Like a Deere®

John Deere frames are tough. No bolts or rivets to jiggle loose. No lightweight metal to give out halfway through a garden plot or a pile of gravel.

In fact, the 420 Tractor frame tips the scale at a not-to-be-taken-lightly 139 pounds. A full 15 percent of the tractor's total weight. And a true indication of the quality John Deere builds in.

Before you buy that first or next tractor, ask the other guys about their frames. Then see us about what separates the real tractors from the toys.
