

Rabies Vaccinations Needed

HARRISBURG — The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture recently announced that at least 160 low-cost rabies clinics have been held or are scheduled statewide in response to passage of a new state law that mandates vaccination of dogs and house cats.

"The private organizations, municipalities and veterinarians conducting these clinics are to be commended for their commitment to pet and public safety," said Dr. Max A. Van Buskirk, Jr., director of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The new law is in response to a serious outbreak of rabies in wild animals. "The intent is to avert a spill over of the disease into pet dogs and cats, which would seriously increase the rabies risk to humans," Van Buskirk said.

There were 583 confirmed cases of rabies in Pennsylvania last year, mostly involving raccoons and skunks, compared with just 14 in 1981.

The law, which took effect Feb. 13, requires vaccination of all dogs and house cats three months of age and older. Inoculations must be given or supervised by licensed veterinarians.

"The Department will provide technical advice to municipalities and organizations on how to go about setting up clinics and helping pet owners comply with the law," Van Buskirk stressed.

The Department is charged with administering and enforcing the law. All provisions of the law, including penalties, are in effect, he noted.
