

Families Tell Why They Love Living On A Dairy Farm

From the Reltzes of Shamokin: (left photo) Doris and Vaughn; (right photo) Lloyd Sr., Gwennie Jane, Lloyd Jr., Pamela, Andrew, and Nicholas. "We enjoy the togetherness that farm life brings to a family. Our family also enjoys working with animals."

From the Rohrer of Cochranville: (from left) Gerald, Jay, Vera and Elvin. "A city consumer said she heard about the old-fashioned milk where the cream comes to the top, assuming that 25% was fat. Where else but on a dairy farm could we get a wholesome education?"

From the Brubakers of Manheim: (from left) Crystal, Deb, Blake, Lowell, and Heather. "For six generations, our family enjoyed farming as a privilege to work and share together harmoniously. Passing on this heritage to our children is our goal."

From the Whipples of Towanda: (from left) Pam, Bryan, Anita holding Tootsie and Bob. "Living on a dairy farm is truly a great life. It has offered our family excels, a sense of independence and pride, stimulating surroundings, fresh air, pets and the chance to learn responsibility. We love the farm life and the community we live in."

The Brantners from Lurgan: (from left) Melissa, Carl, Lewis, Grace and Mark. "The dawn of a new day is renewed hope, challenge and new goals. Our three teenagers like to show their dairy animals at various shows."

From the Bitlers of Fleetwood: (from left) Phoebe, Dave and Jesse. "Our family gladly accepts the enjoyment and responsibility of caring for a small piece of God's creation by being dairy farmers."

From the Burkholders of Chambersburg: (from left) Joyce, Julie, Katie, Anita, Mark and Curtis. "Living on a dairy farm gives us the opportunity to work together and enjoy the beauties of nature and new life around us."

The Longeneckers from Elizabethtown: (from left) Dolly, Sharon, Glenn, and Jamie.

Sight of Contentment, cows grazing.
Sound of dependency, calves crying.
Smell of satisfaction, new-mown hay.
Touch of sharing responsibilities, joys.
Taste of refreshment, ice cream!

The Wilkinsons from Landenberg: (from left) dressed as the purple cow is Betsy, who is the mother of Elisa (right). Our family is supportive of Elisa's reign as Chester County dairy princess. We promote the dairy industry. Farming is our way of family togetherness.

The Bollingers from Newmanstown: (from left) Angela, Donald, Rosene and Steven. "Living on a dairy farm is teaching our children to work with animals and enjoy nature.

Our children are being taught to work and have responsibility in order to accomplish their future goals. We have a close family relationship being able to work and enjoy farming together."

The Bushongs from Columbia: (from left) Nell, Glenn, Nanette, Ruth and Nicole. "We enjoy living on a dairy farm because we can all work together. We all have our jobs whether it's caring for the smallest calf or the largest fields."