

4-H Credited

when she became one of two head counselors for the Mercer County 4-H junior campout in June.

Her organizational skills were employed as she planned activities for the day-and-a-half camp. Her social skills were used to help trouble shoot and solve problems. Her domestic knowledge helped her make lunch for the youngsters. Finally the confidence she gained through public speaking enabled her to lead the campers in song.

Kim, the daughter of Margaret and John Romain, became involved with 4-H 10 years ago as a seven-year-old. She has been active in several projects including goats, leader programs, and photography. "I enjoy goats most," she commented. "I've shown them at 4-H shows and the Butler-Area Dairy Goat Association show."

She keeps her breeding goats at the family farm, a 109-acre operation with beef and goats.

For Kim, perhaps the biggest thing 4-H has taught her is leadership. And through leadership, she has learned responsibility. "Four-H has helped me to accept responsibility better and whatever I do I'm not going to be completely inexperienced. When I get a new job to do, I can put together (knowledge of how to do) tasks that I've done before, and they will help me to that job."

As a 4-H'er Kim has participated on the 4-H County Council for three years including a stint as county council secretary. She also has assisted with 4-H Roundup with things such as the box social, small animals judging, and been a judge of the pet show.

This summer Kim employed the knowledge and confidence she gained in 4-H to teach native Indians and Eskimos in Fairbanks, Ala.

As a 4-H'er Grant participated in showing dairy cows such as this Jersey.
