

Johnson Accepts MAES Associate Director Post

COLLEGE PARK, MD — Dr. Bryan H. Johnson will become associate director of the University of Maryland's Agricultural Experiment Station on November 7.

"I'm delighted to announce that Dr. Johnson has accepted the associate professor director position," said Dr. Robert A. Kennedy, director of the Agricultural Experiment Station. "Dr. Johnson's background and expertise will add a much needed dimension to AES research programs, especially in the coordination and development of animal research programs and facilities, and in the management of AES projects and budgets." Johnson, 49, is currently head of the department of animal science at the University of Wyoming in Laramie, Wyo. Born in Hammond, La., Johnson received his bachelor's degree from Southeastern Louisiana College, his master's degree from Louisiana State University, and his doctorate in animal breeding and reproductive physiology from Oklahoma

State University.

"I am very impressed with the current administrative leadership for agriculture at the University of Maryland," Johnson said. "I see tremendous opportunities for Maryland agriculture and look forward to contributing to the state's agricultural efforts."

Johnson was a member of the animal science, physiology and biotechnology faculty at North Carolina State University from 1971-1988. He became head of the University of Wyoming's animal science department in 1988.

Maryland's Agricultural Experiment Station, funded with $16.8 million in state and federal support, operates nine research locations at four Research and Education Centers throughout Maryland. It supports research on the College Park campus, the University of Maryland-Eastern Shore, the University of Maryland's Center for Environmental and Estuarine Studies and the Maryland Biotechnology Institute.
