

PSU Alumni Society

CAAS President Alan Bair, Lancaster, a 1967 Dalry Science graduate (seated right), discusses future Penn State alumni activities with past president Dr. David Morrow, State College, a 1956 graduate in Dalry Science, and CAAS director Mee Cee Houser, Millerstown, a 1982 Ag Education graduate.

In addition to the 15 elected board members, CAAS has directors serving from five affiliate groups representing individual departments within the College. There has been a food science group and an ag and extension educators group organized within the last year.

An ongoing project, according to Bair, is the documentation of CAAS, which was established in 1967, making it one of the earliest alumni societies within the University. It continues to be one of the most active and effective societies at Penn State. As president, Bair serves on the Alumni Council of the University, which has representatives from each of the Colleges.

Bair says one sign of the strength of the organization is the number of qualified candidates willing to serve each year on the election slate. There is also an eagerness among directors to work on the many projects and programs that take place throughout the year. "Others are envious of our program size and content, and the willingness of alumni to serve," Bair noted.

One of the attractions of belonging to CAAS, and becoming involved, is that it brings together those who are involved in Pennsylvania's biggest industry - agriculture.

Dr. David Morrow, left, Penn State's College of Agriculture Alumni Society, receives the Penn State's Dairymen's Club outstanding membership award from Roger Pertl, director.
