Spring Belle Has Top Herd, Lancaster Declines Centralization

EVERETT NEWSWANGER Managing Editor
SMOKETOWN (Lancaster

Co.)—The Lancaster County chairman of the research committee for centralization of Pennsylvania DHIA told the dairy farmers at the Red Rose DHIA annual meeting here Tuesday that joining the state centralization process would not be in the best interest of the local members.

Speaking to more than 500 members at the dinner meeting, John Howard said the committee came to this conclusion after extensive research into the matter.

Howard gave a lengthy step-bystep report on the process taken by the local committee and the events that transpired to bring the committee to this decision.

As options with state were closed, information was sought from other service providers. As of the meeting, negotiations had been opened with Maryland and Raleigh, N.C. A late offer from state was also being considered.

In a show of unity by the membership, a motion of support for the actions of the committee and the local board was passed by voice vote without audible dissent.

The Red Rose DHIA financial report was given to members, with total revenues at $1,158,847.65; a margin for the year of $3,438.19

NMPF Young Cooperators Meet

Maryland Correspondent ORLANDO, Fla. — The Young Cooperators of National Milk Producers Federation met in Orlando, Fla., for leadership sessions, seminars, inspiration, to share views, learn and have fun, then to take the information back home and share with other cooperative members.

Following an annual tradition, the young cooperators decorated their Christmas tree at the opening session. Each participant hung an ornament on the tree representing their farm or cooperative. As they hung their ornaments, each gave a brief introduction of their family, farm and co-op activities.

David Simpson, minister of Oakdale Emory United Methodist Church in Olney, Md., highlighted Sunday night's YC opening session with reflections on the famous song, "Do You Hear What I Hear?'

Simpson said that it makes all the difference in the world how you see things. Twenty years ago a person may have looked at the area of Disney World complex as being filled with shrub trees and swamp land. "But what did Walt Disney see?" he rhetorically asked

Simpson shared stories with the YC's of his experiences growing up on his family's dairy farm and his work as a minister. He complemented the YC's for being selected to participate in the YC

"You are the folks the dairy industry will be looking to for new direction and vitality," Simpson

"Take hold of a new vision for yourselves and your cooperative. We need visionaries, people to look beyond the present," he said. "Now is the time to begin marching forward to live out your own dreams."

After the session, the young cooperators gathered for an old fashioned ice cream social.

The enthusiasm, excitement and knowledge of young cooperators mixed with experience and leadership causes Tom Camerlo, NMPF president, to see a good

GAIL STROCK Mifflin Co. Correspondent LEWISTOWN (Mifflin Co.) -Those attending the Mifflin County Cooperative Extension Association's annual meeting on December 9 at Hartman Center in Milroy

undoubtedly joined their forefathers in accepting change gracefully. Change became the thread that connected two unrelated events on the program that evening.

One order of business was the need to revise the bylaws. Because extension is more than agriculture, members voted to change the old name, the Mifflin County Agricultural Extension Association, to the Mifflin County Cooperative Extension Association, indicating the common goal to improve the standard of living of all residents.

The other program event concerning change was the main point made by the guest speaker, Dr. Manfred Kroger, professor of food science at Penn State.

In building up to his main point, Dr. Kroger stated that, in the

Manure Storage Study Finds Farmers Risk Safety

First of two parts

ANDY ANDREWS Lancaster Farming Staff LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) —

There are some things farmers just don't want to talk about. But some things you have to talk about. Because if you don't, it can cost you - even kill you. One of those things is your manure storage system. A new report published by the USDA Soil Conservation Service (SCS) contains the result of a year-long study of 99 manure storage systems in Pennsylvania.

The study, published in October this year, was the result of a twoyear long program to examine manure structures. The manure storages under scrutiny included facilities such as manure pond, structure, and treatment lagoons.

Existing facilities

With aid of the conservation districts in each of the counties across the state, the SCS study evaluated existing manure storage facilities. In the summer of 1990, 99 facilities were studied, including those with and without the assistance of USDA/SCS.

From a master list of 2,013 facilities that the SCS was aware of throughout the state, and with the
