

Lancaster Chamber Now Has Farmer Associate Member Program

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.)—To create a closer tie between the Lancaster Chamber of Commerce and farmers, a new associate membership program has been initiated. This program is open to all farmers for a nominal fee of $35 yearly.

Chamber Farm Associates help present a voice for agriculture within the business and benefit from the advocacy efforts of the chamber's manager of agricultural services on governmental, regulatory and environmental issues.

In addition, a quarterly newsletter and direct invitations with reduced rates to programs and events sponsored by the chamber's ag committee are part of the package.

The chamber is not a government agency or a political organization but has 2,200 members, mostly small business persons who volunteer to help create a better business community.

The chamber acknowledges the importance of agriculture to its mission and has an active ag committee comprised of one-third farmers, one-third agri-leaders and one-third agri-business representatives. With the farmer associates program, the farm community can have an additional important presence in the Lancaster business community.

To become a Chamber Farm Associate, write a $35 check for a 12-month membership and send it to: Chamber Farm Associate, The Lancaster Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Box 1558, Lancaster, PA 17603-1558.

Hamilton Named Coordinator

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — George Hamilton has been appointed to coordinate the Penn State agronomy department's two-year turfgrass management program.

The certification program, which combines four eight-week sessions with a six-month professional internship, is oriented toward training golf course managers and other landscaping superintendents.

Hamilton, who has earned bachelor's and master's degrees in agronomy from Penn State, has taught a variety of turfgrass courses and has been in charge of development for the university's Landscape Management Research Center since 1982.

For information about the program, call (814) 865-8301, or write to the Short Course Office, 306 Agricultural Administration Building, University Park, PA 16802.
