Rev. William Longenecker has been well known as a good shepherd in Lancaster County for many years. Until recently, Longenecker had a flock of more than 400 ewes on the farm north of Mount Joy. But now he is the pastor of the Stevens Hill Community Church of the Brethren so his flock of people has caused interest in sheep to diminish to about 150 ewes. In the photos, above, the Polypay flock grazes over the 62 acres. At right, neighbors Kendra Gehman and children Jacob, 8; Hannah, 4, and Dari, 2, cuddle a 3-day-old lamb. Father and husband Dale Gehman works at Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions. Deiter's greenhouses supplied the azaleas. Photos by Everett Newswanger, managing editor.

Dickinson Submits Resignation From CEO Position At National DHIA

EVERETT NEWSWANGER
Managing Editor
COLUMBUS, OHIO—The chief executive officer of the National Dairy Herd Improvement Association has resigned. Dr. Frank Dickinson asked that his resignation be effective June 1, 1992. In making the announcement, Michael Quesnell, national DHIA president, said that the actions to accept Dickinson's resignation took place during a meeting of the National DHIA Executive Committee here last week. At the same time, Philip Dukas, director of operations and quality assurance, was appointed acting CEO as of June 1. Dukas also holds the position of CEO of DHIA Services, Inc., the product and service arm of National DHIA. "Dr. Dickinson expressed a desire to the executive committee to reduce his workload in order to have more time to pursue personal interests," Quesnell said. "He submitted a transition plan that will permit an orderly change in management. This will also give National DHIA the opportunity to search for replacement staff since this is the optimal time of year for recruiting." Quesnell said the National DHIA Board will address the (Turn to Page A22)
