preventing twins.

According to Edelson, twins are common in equines because the viability of the sperm is four to five days, and the horse can come into a second heat, although one fertilized egg has already traveled toward the uterus.

He explained how triplets can occur also when two follicles release eggs about the same time and both get fertilized and then a follicle on the other ovary releases an egg several days later, which becomes fertilized.

He showed several video tapes of previous ultrasounds he performed on horses. He said he video tapes all of his ultrasounds so that While he and others watch closely at the monitor screen, Dr. Jeffery Edelson, V.M.D., performs an ultrasound on a pregnant draft horse mare. Luke Bruckhart, president of the Pennsylvania Draft Horse & Mule Association, holds a microphone for the veterinarian.

Nathan Yoder, a Peach Bottom blacksmith, displays his technique for drawing out the metal of a shoe for fitting. He works with a portable system. The gas-fired furnace glows behind him.
