

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

On the days when it rains and I can not be in the garden picking sugar peas and strawberries, I bake. When I accumulate too much, some is put in the freezer.

Recently, I tried a Fudge Cupcake recipe but didn't have much luck with it and so I threw it away. Then I made cornmeal biscuits but they got rather hard and so that recipe followed the other one. The next day I made sticky buns from an old recipe and they were delicious. The problem with them is that I tend to eat too many of them. I think that I'll give some away to my son and his family.

There is a den of red foxes in a wooded area near our house and we've enjoyed watching them play in the sunshine. They are probably hard on the rabbit population as I've seen a parent carrying some home to the young.

This year I've planted more bulbs than ever before. Some were free samples from a company from whom I'd ordered shrubs. I had to write down on paper the order in which I planted them so that I could put a name to them — if they grow. My lilies that I've had for years, multiplied to the point that I've been giving them to my neighbors that walk by my house daily. Some of them have attractive red blossoms while others have very fragrant white flowers. I hope that they will plant them and enjoy them as I do.
