

Through The Eyes Of Staff Cameras

"Hey, this is great tasting stuff," said Sam Thieret, left, as he indulged in eating a maple syrup sundae. Richard Mummert agreed. Thieret, from Thomasville, and Mummert, from Dover, said that even though they are retired farmers, farming is still in their blood. Every year they come to Ag Progress Days to enjoy the exhibits, great food, and farm tours.

Elsie Smith of Roaring Springs, right, has plenty of help with her seven grandkids who help churn the ice cream.

Red observers at the Ice Cream Glee family.

Conservation demonstration shows that when it rains its better to have some stalk residue left in the fields to prevent runoff.

Pour on the rock salt is Jim Harper's solution to making ice cream in the hot sun.

One to churn, one to hold the freezer steady, and another to supervise.

Watching the horse demonstration.

Something's not quite right. These two draft horses got a little twisted as they were being practiced for a plowing demonstration at Ag Progress Days. They were untwisted and headed in the right direction within moments.