1993 Animal Housing Expo Looks For Exhibitors

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — The 1993 Animal Housing Expo will be held July 13-14 at the Lebanon Fairgrounds in Lebanon County.

"The Animal Housing Expo is an opportunity for livestock, dairy and poultry producers in the Northeast to learn about available building supplies, livestock equipment and services," says general chair Daniel McFarland, associate extension agent for Penn State Cooperative Extension in York County.

More than 1,400 people attended last year's expo to learn more about building and remodeling considerations, computerized ventilation systems, dairy calf and heifer housing, calf weaning hutches, freestall designs and beds, hazards to farm workers and nutrient run-off from farms.

The 1992 Animal Housing Expo featured 28 commercial exhibits and many educational displays. The expo committee plans to increase this year's exhibitor participation to fully represent dairy, livestock and poultry housing concerns.

The committee is seeking exhibits on building designs and materials, healthy and comfortable animal environments, materials storage and handling, animal handling equipment and labor efficiency.

Businesses and individuals interested in exhibiting at the 1993 expo should contact exhibit committee chair Leon Hoover, 410 East Lincoln Avenue, Myerstown, PA 17067, (717) 866-7565.

In addition to commercial exhibits, there will be a variety of denominations and discussions. Last year's event featured discussions on remodeling as opposed to new construction, site selection and building location, lenders concerns, regulations, animal environment and well-being and manure management. Nationally recognized experts are currently being scheduled to address various animal housing issues.

The event will be conducted by Penn State Cooperative Extension in cooperation with local agribusinesses.
