

Perry County Extension Meets

MILLERSTOWN (Perry Co.) — Charlie and Virginia Beaver, and Fred Noye were among several county residents honored at the Annual Meeting of Perry County Cooperative Extension. Beavers were honored with a citation from the Pennsylvania House of Representatives recognizing their achievements in attaining the Master Farmer Award. County Extension Director Dave Swartz presented a slide show highlighting Beaver's farm operation. This slide presentation featured Charlie's work in soil conservation, his reliance on no-till crop production and Charlie and Ginny's involvement in community organizations.

Fred Noye was presented the "Friend of Extension" Award for his many years of support, both locally and statewide, for Penn State Cooperative Extension and Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

Eileen Latchford, nutrition advisor for a nutrition education program administered through the Extension Office, was recognized for her 15 years of work in the program.

Kendall Byers, Millerstown and Ed Horn, Loysville, were presented with "Conservation Farmer of the Year Awards" from the Perry County Soil Conservation District during the evening's program.

Approximately 95 county residents attended the annual Meeting held at the Perry Valley Grange Hall which was chaired by Extension Board of Directors' President Brenda Benner, Millerstown. The meeting is held each year to highlight the work accomplished in Perry County by Penn State Cooperative Extension, an affirmative action, equal opportunity organization. The programs provided by Cooperative Extension are open to all individuals. To receive a copy of the 1992 Annual Report or to obtain information about Extension's educational programs, call 582-2131, ext. 243.

Harold Ott, regional director, Penn State Cooperative Extension, left, presents "Perry County Friend of Extension" award to Fred Noye, New Bloomfield.
