PFA Washington Tour March 10-11

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.) — A delegation of 200 farmers from Pennsylvania are expected to travel to Washington D.C. March 10 and 11 to meet with U.S. congressmen on issues affecting agriculture.

Among the issues to be discussed are health care, the economy, international trade, and private property rights.

The face-to-face meetings are to be part of the annual Pennsylvania Farmers' Association (PFA) Washington Legislative Tour.

PFA is a voluntary, general farm organization which represents 23,189 families in 54 county associations. It is part of the nation's largest farm organization, the four-million member American Farm Bureau Federation.

Part of the purpose of the annual trip is so that members of PFA county farmers' association bi-partisan national legislative committees can have an opportunity to sit down with their federal-level representatives to talk about their group's position on current issues.

"The tour give us the opportunity to make ourselves seen and heard in Washington on matters that are important to us," said Keith Eckel, president of PFA. "With a new Congress gearing up to tackle a host of problems, PFA believes it's important to make sure our lawmakers know where we stand."

Eckel spoke out on PFA position on what he said were key issues.

On environmental issues and private property rights, Eckel said, "Our goal is to protect the private rights of landowners. We want to reduce and minimize unnecessary regulations and to ensure that any regulation, legislation or legal action that restricts private property rights results in compensation."

On the federal budget, taxes and economic growth, Eckel said, "PFA seeks to establish government policies that encourage economic growth, increase productivity, foster greater competitive ability in the international market, enhance profitability and prosperity for all segments of American society and encourage private investment."

On international trade, "We seek to establish trade and related economic policies that promote rather than retard the growth in world trade. PFA advocates trade agreements that establish substantial and progressive reductions in foreign trade barriers and subsidies, and provide for fair competition."

On health care, Eckel had more to say. "PFA recommends the establishment of government policies that recognize that health care is primarily the responsibility of the individual. We believe government health care policies should promote wellness, fitness and preventative care. They should also have a minimum of government intervention."

Rep. Tim Holden, Pennsylvania's only representative on the House Agriculture Committee, is to be the speaker for the banquet. Eckel is to address the breakfast.
