

Workshop Examines Beef Evaluation Techniques

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — More than 75 beef producers were on hand Wednesday night at the New Holland Sales Stables to examine new techniques used to obtain and evaluate quality beef. Demonstrations and overviews were presented on ultrasound scanning, injection site safety, and live cattle evaluation by several industry and academic professionals. The two-part event concluded Friday night at Stoltzfus Meats, Intercourse, with a carcass evaluation to see dress-out. Here, Penn State Instructor Keith Bryan describes how to evaluate leanness, while Casey High holds the reins. Show coordinator Chet Hughes, Lancaster extension agent, said the two-day workshop is an effort to put farmers closer to consumers they feed. Photo by Andy Andrews.
