

Alumni Society Meets

Karl Girton was elected president for the next term and, as his first act, called for approval of seven bylaw changes as recommended by the society's executive committee.

The changes were to:

- Alter references to the "College of Agriculture" to "College of Agricultural Sciences."
- Give each affiliate organization the power to determine the length of term of office of a representative appointed to serve on the board.
- Change the prerequisite of directors seeking election to board presidency to include serving a minimum two-year term as a president-elect prior to actually beginning to serve a two-year term as president. This was done in order to ensure that a director was still an active member at the time they would normally stand for presidency.

- Allow the executive committee (which consists of the president, president-elect, immediate past president, the dean of the College of Agricultural Sciences and the executive secretary of the society) to meet without giving prior notification to the full board of directors as had been the rule. Any decisions made by the executive committee are still subject to full board approval before becoming enacted.

- Consolidate the nine standing committees to four committees and realigning responsibilities.
- Add the society treasurer to the membership of the executive committee and remove the wording that would require executive committee members to notify the full board of directors prior to meeting.
- To continue to allow committees to be as large as necessary, but to also allow each committee to appoint subcommittees to carry specific committee responsibilities. The purpose for the change is related to the consolidation of the standing committees — instead of serving on multiple standing committees, each board member is to be assigned to one of the four committees which can then split responsibilities to subcommittees.

In other action, Alan Bair was recognized for at least a decade of serving on the society board. David Morrow was recognized for his service.

In other awards, Rep. Samuel Hayes Jr. R-Tyrone, was recognized with one of eight 4-H awards presented nationwide for his 22 years support of 4-H. He was also recognized for his long-standing commitment to agriculture.

In accepting the award, Hayes said that the efforts of the 4-H program and the College of Agricultural Sciences and the Extension Service in support of youth are good not just for the agricultural college and Pennsylvania's agricultural and economic strength, but good for all of America.

Hayes said that is important for all to realize the importance of guiding youth into a healthy and rewarding life through caring, nurturing, and by helping to set and reach goals.

"Even if the world was completely charted, there are still young 'Magellans' coming on," he said, charging the society to aid and encourage the desire to learn and explore and seek the undiscovered.

In effect, Hayes said that not only does youth have the explored to re-explore, but that there will never be a lack of something to explore. And he said that with youth must be encouraged to "(fight) ignorance and to lead the world from the darkness (of ignorance) into the light of truth and knowledge and to make this a better world.

"We must provide the next generations of Magellans with the greatest opportunities known to mankind," he said.

In other business, Dean Hood provided an overview of the status of the College of Agricultural Sciences.

According to Hood:
