Equine Sleeping Sickness Confirmed

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Maryland Secretary of Agriculture Robert L. Walker has announced that eastern equine encephalomyelitis (EEE), a virus that causes "sleeping sickness" in horses, has been found in Maryland. The EEE virus is spread by the bite of an infected mosquito.

"EEE is an extremely serious disease, with an 80 percent mortality to horses and 30 percent to humans. It is a matter of public health and animal health concern," Walker said. Maryland Department of Agriculture scientists at the Animal Health Laboratory in Salisbury, Md. diagnosed the disease as the cause of death of a horse in Wicomico County in mid-July. The Yale University Arbovirus Research Laboratory confirmed the diagnosis. This is the first confirmed horse case of the fatal disease found in Maryland since 1991.

"All horse owners should have their unvaccinated horses, ponies, mules, and (donkeys) vaccinated immediately by a veterinarian.
