

Farm-City Activities

 about the most basic human group — a family — living off of the land, trading effort for survival, believing in a creator, noticing the passage of time through the miracles of the cycles of life, and having hope that by passing on hard-won knowledge and understanding to the next generation, that there is hope for something better. Through the efforts of those

Vince Wagner, normally a dairyman, gets some advice from wife Julie, on how to mix a compound to make a mold of teeth. The couple was participating in the Lebanon County Farm-City job-exchange program.

Smiling beneath a protective mask, Julie Wagner holds the mirror for husband Vince. Vince and Julie run a dairy farm in Myerstown and spent a day working with Carroll and Jean Ditzler, a husband and wife dentistry team.

involved with Farm-City programs, every year a new crop of citizens has a chance at better understanding the role of the family farm — in its development of the United States, and in supporting a culture that can foster understanding, peace and growth.

To better understand what agriculture and city life is and is not, through the use of the Lebanon County Chamber of Commerce, agricultural and non agricultural people in the county have been organizing Farm-City Week activities for many years.

This year, the events included its traditional Lebanon Valley Mall exhibit, with a duck slide, incubator hatching chicks, farm animals, local commodity queens.
