Complex from Penn State. The main reason for the move was the hassle with bad weather.

Grimes and his wife Mary donated a Charolais heifer to Heather Sleeman, winner of the Charolais Heifer Chain, a program established by the association last year. According to the rules, the winner is to show the animal and give back the first female offspring to the association so that it can be given to another young showman.

The association chose Jamie Lynn Cowell as the recipient of the scholarship award. Jamie, the daughter of James and Billie Cowell of Waynesburg is a member of the American Junior Simmental Association. The high school senior operates her own cattle fitting and showing business called Neon Fitting Service. The National Honor Society member is active in many school activities and has won awards in 4-H beef breeding, market steer, lamb, swine, and sheep.

She plans to use the $250 scholarship to study ag technology at Central Missouri State University.

The Seedstock Producer Award went to Frank Darcey of Spring Bottom Farm in Adams County. According to Rep. Sheila Miller, Darcey received the award for his accomplishment and involvement in selling seed stock for bulls across the U.S. Darcey is president of Adams County Beef Producers, board member of Farmers Home Administration and Pa. Cattleman, president of the Polled Hereford Association, and active in Keystone International Livestock Exposition, Pennsylvania Farm Show, and other livestock-related events.

Other awards went to the Beef Council represented by Elrose Glick, David Ivan, and Tammy Baltzhaser.

For signing up the most new members, Bunk Smith of Dillsburg received the Top Hand Award.
