

Lebanon Area Fair

Farmers' Night had been held in previous years and is usually designed as a competition between adult farm couples to do such things as stack hay or straw bales, pig calling, and wheelbarrel racing, among with activities for farm children.

Those interested in participating in Farmers' Night activities have up until a half-hour before starting time to sign up at the fair office.

Bring Animals

Monday Or Wednesday

Also because of the change in the dairy shows, there is a slight change in when show officials want dairy cattle exhibitors to bring animals to the fairgrounds.

According to Ebling, those bringing 4-H and FFA animals can do so all-day Monday. But Ebling said that those who don't bring their animals on Monday, can bring them to the fairgrounds

Behind the scenes at the Lebanon Area Fair are community volunteers who help make it a success. In addition to the months of preparations and work, volunteers also keep records of shows and tally official results.

Although the dairy shows at the Lebanon Area Fair have seen a reduced number of entries, the quality of the shows isn't expected to be reduced at all. This year, all shows are to be held Friday, August 5, starting at 9 a.m. Here is last year's grand champion Holstein and those who helped celebrate and support the show. On the left, is the Dale Maulfair family, sponsor of the supreme champion award — Pattle holds son David, while Daryl and Jennifer present the trophy. Stephanie Wagner holds the halter of her supreme champion, while fair royalty help. The royalty is, from the left, Amy Burkhart, Jamie Irwin, Jennifer Bashore, and Stacy Krall.

Youth market animal sales are a highlight of the Lebanon Area Fair. Here Bob Blecker, vice president for Carlos R. Leffler Inc., an annual youth market animal sale supporter, holds a plaque and stands with Kyle Fleener and his champion market lamb and 1993 Lebanon Area Fair Queen Jamie Irwin.

The Lebanon Area Fair is a place for families to spend time together enjoying the crafts and shows and displays, and each other. Hugs and smiles are frequently seen.
