

How Do Winebarks Spell Hog Championship? Try D, As In 'Danielle'

Lancaster Farming Staff
NORTH CORNWALL (Lebanon Co.) — Janine Winebark took along the two "D's" to the fair — her two hogs, a light heavyweight Hampshire/Berkshire gilt named Danielle and a purebred Duroc barrow named David — hoping for the best.

"Best" was spelled with a "D," indeed, as 255-pound Danielle won supreme market hog on Monday at the Lebanon Fair Swine Show.

(And David did well too, earning first place in his class in the breed show.)

Janine, 10, daughter of Ken and Janet Winebark, Myerstown, obtained the gilt out of a boar from the herd of Gary Winebark, Rossiter, Indiana County. Another offspring of the same boar won champion and reserve at the Jefferson County Fair several weeks ago, according to Ken Winebark.

Janine, who will attend fifth grade at Jackson Elementary in the fall, won champion Duroc last year at the fair. She also won supreme champion junior market hog at the state Farm Show in January.

Janine's father said that the only connection with the Farm Show champion is that they're both black and white.

This is Janine's second year of showing and first Lebanon Fair champion.

Janet Winebark said that her kids decided to name the hogs with names beginning with "D" in honor of David Holloway, from which the family obtained David, the Duroc. "The kids like doing dumb things like that," said Janet.

For the Keystone International Livestock Exposition (KILE) competition, of which the Winebarks plan to show in October, the hogs are named in honor of Biblical Easter characters, such as "Bartholomew" and "Peter," said Janet. (Though it was hard for Janine to recall "Bartholomew," according to Janet.)

The Winebarks will be showing hogs at the Southeast Market Hog Derby at the fairgrounds this month and at the Maryland State Fair in September, in addition to KILE and the state Farm Show.

Judge Henry Holloway, a Yorkshire breeder from Darlington, Md., said the competition contained the "highest quality set of hogs I've seen at a show" and expressed his difficulty in deciding between Janine's belted black and white hog and the red Duroc shown by Jenny Arnold. In the end, while the Duroc was the finest "long-bodied, sound, correct, and lean hog" in his view, the black hog showed the "heavy muscling and extreme leanness" required by the industry.

Jenny Arnold, 18, daughter of Larry and Donna Arnold, Womelsdorf, won reserve champion overall hog at the Lebanon Fair on Monday with her 263-pound purebred Duroc. The hog was obtained from her father's herd.

Kevin Sellers, 16, son of Ken and Karen Sellers, Lebanon, showed the reserve market hog, Hank, at the swine show on Monday. Kevin, a sophomore at Annville Cleona, a Little Dutchmen FFA member, purchased Hank at a sale by Leon Arnold in April. Kevin said that he simply picked the hog from the sale, indicating he didn't know for sure if the hog could be competitive. This is his only show this year, the second year he has shown at the fair.

Jenny Arnold won the championship of the Duroc class. Yorkshire champion was Jamie Risser, and Trisha Berger took the Landrace show. Hampshire show champion was Billie Jo Atkins.

Showmanship champions at the Lebanon Fair included FFA champion John Risser and reserve, Jamie Risser. 4-H champion was Jamie Risser, and reserve was Justin Lehman.

In all, there were a total of 105 hogs shown by 55 exhibitors. Following is a list of show placings.
