alone gave them 19 pounds of wool. Hand-raised wool is washed carefully to preserve the natural lanolin. The fleece is then dried, carded, and spun. Drying is done using local weeds either in fleece or yarn form.

Laura and Richard have what they believe is the only activelysolar heated spinning and weaving supply shop anywhere. Two of the walls are made of "doors" which open to admit natural light and direct heat, and close to put heat into storage. A small woodburning stove, seldom used, supplements the usually ample solar

"We do not do production weaving," assures Laura. "We use no automatic fly shuttles, no computer-controlled looms, no equipment more suitable to a factory than a home. Our weavings are one-of-a-kind. We usually design our own threading patterns.

Richard's weavings are totally self-created. When a professional weaver told him he could not weave a tree, he proved otherwise.

Laura, on the other hand, concentrates on historic reproductions, studying patterns in old history books. Eventually, she hopes to write her own book on creating tapestry forms complete with photographs of her reproductions.

Following the stereo barter, Richard and Laura have purchased several more looms, the most valuable being a Harrisville teaching loom. The warp set is detachable which allows for several students to take lessons without disturbing the weaving. "Within five minutes I can change the warp to suit the student," Richard explains.

Among their prize students is Karl Kauffman, well-known Pennsylvania Sheep shearer who, along with his team members, won first-place in the sheep to shawl contest at the Pennsylvania State Farm Show last year. It was Karl who did the weaving.

Some students come from as far away as Pittsburgh, a several hour drive from their Johnstown home.

It's a busy life for this couple who both suffer from arthritis. They raise their own wide variety of vegetables which includes such unusual speciments as the Jersualsm artichoke. They also pick blueberries, cherries, and apples to can, dry, or freeze and purchase all organically grown barley, corn,

Adams Co. Horse Clubs The Adams County 4-H Horse Clubs held the annual roundup on August 6 at Magic Rose Farm, New Oxford.

Twenty-four 4-H members exhibited their horses and ponies in at least one of the 44 classes.

Each member works with their animal all year and fills out a project book for this animal. Each member must attend five club meetings throughout the year, collect two class sponsors, give a presentation, complete their book, and receive a grooming and showmanship score.

The top three entries or top two pair in these classes are eligible to move on and compete in the Dis-oats, and mullet to bake their own bread.

As the couple works they often think about the history of their location. In the mid 1800s a carding mill was located there to prepare wool for spinning. "We think about that as we card our own wool," Laura says thoughtfully.
