

When I get up in the morning and the thermometer reads 50 degrees, I realize that fall is almost here. Then my daughter, who lives in Georgia, phones and tells me that her children are going to school and I am reminded of years ago when I and my six sisters all went to school at the same time.

Often it was my job to make the lunches and it soon became a chore. There were always a few complaints about the contents. Rain or snow we walked to a country two room school. Even when a bus took us to high school, we still had to walk almost a mile to the bus stop. Now they almost stop at the front door of today's students.

For my own children, school days meant finding enough suitable clothes. Of course, we handed-down dresses and shirts but things like shoes and trousers had to be purchased. When our oldest child started school, we purchased three new dresses for her from Sears --- her first "new" dresses and I saved them for her. But, then she married and had two sons.

The two room school that I attended was built in the late 1800's and my grandfather helped to haul ground away from the hand-dug basement. My mother, as a youngster, went along in the wagon and lost her sun bonnet on one trip. A big furnace was installed in that basement to heat the brick building. There we played on rainy days and the ground floor was so dusty that we almost couldn't see each other as we played tag.

Nowadays, they need playground equipment to keep the children happy. But we had fun simply throwing a ball over the outdoor toilets. School days surely bring back a lot of memories.
