

Pennsylvania Farm Show Issue: A Comprehensive Introduction

 Dairy Promotion Program.
 The butter was donated by Holly Milk Plant, in Carlisle, which is a division of the Atlantic Dairy Cooperative. That plant annually produces 35 million pounds of butter.

 The butter was kept cooled while he worked on it and it was never touched by hands. After the Farm Show, the butter is to be donated to area charities for use in shelters and soup kitchens.

 The theme adopted by the Farm Show Commission — to commemorate the World War II efforts of agriculture — is also behind the displays in the case windows in the Lobby area, including actual airplane engines like the ones worked on during the war years, when the Farm Show Complex was temporarily used for military activities, such as work training and engine repair.

Also, there is a victory garden on the second floor of the second floor of the Northeast Building, and other displays carrying the theme.

Those coming from the large public parking lot and pass through the outside parking lot behind the Northwest Building can also see some World War II items on display by the Pennsylvania Museum Commission.

Those familiar with the area should take note the upgrade and repaving that lot received this past year.

Also new this year are a number of exotic animal displays, including ratites (ostriches, rheas, and emus), llamas, and domestic elk and deer. Visitors can view these exhibits in the Northwest Building of the complex, where beef cattle are displayed.

"We did a lot of different things (this year)," Ritter said. "The family living area is really beautiful, and for the first time we're going to have a fashion show of items made (for entries in home craft competitions)."

The fashion show is to be held Saturday at 5 p.m., Ritter said, and the runway is all set up on the second floor of the Northeast Building.

The Northeast Building is in use for the third year this year, and after two years of organizing the layout, Ritter said "I think we finally got it to where we want it."

In addition to the various family living style displays, there's a Food Market area set up for the second year in a row, but in a different location than last year, and bigger. At the Food Market, various Pennsylvania food processors have their products on display and for sale.

Another thing that's a big draw is a Food Pantry, which also displays various food items.

Overall with the Food Court — which is the large area set aside for the selling and consumption of Pennsylvania's commodity groups products — there are three different areas specifically set for the exhibition of homegrown foods.

The Food Court is where the famous baked potatoes, vegetables soups, fried vegetables, apple cider, various hot and cold meat sandwiches, poultry and fish and mushrooms are sold and consumed in huge quantities.

Ritter said that those also seeking new experiences should consider taking in the draft horse shoeing exhibition set to be held about 4:15 p.m. on Wednesday, Jan. 11.
