FALLING IN LOVE WITH YOUR KIDS

February 14 is Valentine's Day — the day we express our love to our loved ones. You might also make this the day to start falling in love with your kids. You may say "But I already love my kids." I'm sure you do, but you also have to fall in love with them. There are nine basic ingredients for falling in love with your kids.

1. Spend time together
Could you fall in love with someone if you only spent an hour a day together and during that time you were fixing dinner, folding the laundry or reading a newspaper. Probably not.

It's important to spend some focused time with your child.

When you set aside special time for your child he says to himself, "If my parents take this time to be with me, I must be important." There are lots of ways of spending effective time with your children.

* Take them to a special place. You'll be creating a memory by sharing a special place.

* Make a date. A regular date with each child adds to their sense of security and satisfies their need to feel special.

* "The Spotlights on Me!" Spotlight your children on days other than birthdays or special occasions. Try an activity called "Star of the Evening" on that evening the child receives the family's undivided attention at a show-and-tell session. The special child can talk about anything that is really of interest to him or her. At the end give the child a standing ovation.

2. Develop common interests.
