owth skills to enable them to ive a successful career in any area ey choose."

Greg has had projects in sheep, eef, and swine, which he has ompetitions.

To concentrate on his national FFA duties, Greg is taking a year majoring in animal science with a husiness optional.

He'd like to have an ag-business marketing career, or maybe a bbying or political career.

Jennafer Neufeld from Kansas is national vice president representing the central region. Like all the other national officers, Jennafer held a state office before being selected for the national position. She was state secretary.

She is taking a year's leave of absence from Kansas State University where she is majoring in agricultural law. Her career sights are set on becoming a lobbyist for agriculture or a legal consultant for an ag corporation.

Raised on a farm with 80,000 chickens and 1,000 acres, Jennafer did not join FFA until her sophomore year in high school, when the FFA advisor asked her to participate in livestock judging.

"Advisers really make a difference in students' lives," Jennafer said. "I wouldn't be here if my adviser hadn't encouraged me to While many people acquaint Trisha Bailey wants them to know cessful career." that Florida's agriculture industry is neck in neck with the tourist industry in her state.

"We (Florida) have the largest cattle production cast of the Mississippi and we are the strawberry capitol of the world," she said.

Unlike most national officers, Trisha does not live on a farm. Her dad works in construction and her mom is a nurse. Trisha's interest in horticulture and forestry prompted her to take agriculture classes in eighth grade. Her exposure to agriculture resulted in personal enlightment to the many different facets of agriculture. Now her enthusiasm for FFA bubbles

"There's something for every single person in the (FFA) organization if they give it a chance," she said.

She is taking a dual major in ag communications and sports physiol-By at the University of Florida. With that unusual combination. Trisha hopes to work in rehabilitating injured rodeo riders and anchor as a farm broadcaster on television.

Travis Hagen, the national secretary. received his introduction to FFA early in life. His dad is a high school agriculture teacher.

Hagen said that Califorma is the number one agricultural state in the nation and has one of the nighest FFA memberships of all the states.

In the Chico FFA chapter, Travis participated in production and sales and services. He received the state star agribusiness award and was named state treasurer.

To receive the American ntered in county and state Degree, Travis submitted a 17-page application. He read publication after publication to keep abreast of ag issues and curoff from his studies as a sophomore rent events and spoke at numerous Rotary Clubs and other organizations. But the best thing about FFA involvement, he said, is going to livestock shows and developing friendships that will last a lifetime.

After graduating from California Polytechnic University, Travis wants to teach high school agriculture for at least five years.

"I want to share my love for agri-

After that, he hopes to become a marketing specialist for a large agri-business.

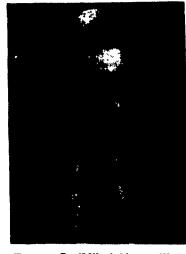

Lee Schroeder, who is vice president of the eastern region, lives in Ohio. His family raises corn, soybeans and wheat on 850 acres. Corey had 15 steers of his own and has a partner contract for a pig operation.

After fulfilling his term as a national officer, he will resume agriculture education at Ohio State University. He plans to either teach agriculture or start his own agribusiness service to local farmers.

Travis' Hagen Keard about FFA before he could walk. His dad, an agriculture teacher, influenced Travis to take of FFA advantage opportunities.
