

Alicia Mase's Brown Swiss Supreme Champion At Lebanon

Last year, Allison won the award and her younger sister Amanda won second place. Allison won with the same cow she showed to earn last year's title, Promise-Lane Melwood Audrey, now a senior 2-year-old.

This year, second place honors went to Amy Habecker, of Palmyra, while Timothy Vail, of Lebanon, was third.

Judge Creedin Cornman officiated over the placing of animals entered and commented on the competition. He said he always enjoys judging in Lebanon County, with its facilities and the supportive dairy community, and especially because of the efforts and behavior of the youth. "I'm not sure who started this competition, but it is a very good one."

He said he was honored to be part of an event that rewards the total efforts of youth in developing their ability to breed and raise high quality cattle and maintain highly organized and well-maintained records.

Photographs, notes, nutrition and vet records and treatments, as well as associated costs for feeding the animal, registration papers, DHIA records, and showing records are kept up by the youth in their project books.

Cornman noted that the competition is perhaps one of the few that truly acknowledges and rewards the type of responsible dairy cattle-raising behavior that leaders and educators attempt to impart on youth so that those youth can become successful and can later teach others.

In other honors of the 4-H and open Brown Swiss show, colored breed judge Schnebly selected senior 3-year-old Heilinger Simon Necessity, owned by Bruce Heilinger of Newmanstown, as reserve open division grand champion.

Of the three senior 3-year-olds entered in the breed show, all captured grand or reserve grand honors.

Heilinger also showed the open division reserve junior champion, an unnamed homebred spring calf, a daughter of Victory Acres Jubilation Emory.

The junior champion in both the open and 4-H divisions was a winter calf, One-Hill Aytola Ivory, shown by Amy Moyer, of Womelsdorf.

Heilinger also captured the dam and daughter competition. The Mases won the dairy herd, produce of dam, and senior best three classes.

In the Ayrshire breed, Dale Maulfair received a surprise recognition of his 40th birthday (actually August 2) the same time he received the trophy for showing the senior and grand champion
