

Ag Progress Is "Hot" Spot For Information, Ideas, New Products, Education And More

While Jayne Sebrigh watches Pennsylvania Alternate Dairy Princess Rachel Tanis gives a coloring book to Lucas, 4, and Elliot, 2. The Dillon brothers are from Spring Mills.

As the Pennsylvania Draft Horse and Mule Ambassador Katy Biddle of Boalsburg tells visitors at Ag Progress the draft horses are for the young and old. "Even though draft horses are large, they are docile," she said.

Velma Schnupp, left, from Lebanon, and Anna Mary Martin, Fredericksburg, tour the Ag Progress grounds while their husbands man an exhibit booth.

Ann Smith, right, and Wilma Rolar from Cumberland County work at Farm Bureau's Women's Committee booth to raise money to establish a canning factory for Ukranium women. Smith said the Ukranium women raise produce but have no facilities to preserve them for out-of-season use.

Jeremy Smith watches Tim Smith use a computer to visualize a landscaping design for a home. The two work together to scan pictures of clients' homes into the computer. They plan a landscape design that shows how the landscape will appear when first planted and how it will appear in 10 years. This helps clients make better decisions in choosing colors and plants.
