

Carbon Monoxide Detector Is A Must For Your Home

LEESPORT (Berks Co.) — Each year, 1,500 Americans die from accidental carbon monoxide poisoning. The US Consumer Product Safety Commission says that every dwelling should have a carbon monoxide detector installed near sleeping areas.

Carbon monoxide is a colorless, odorless, tasteless, highly poisonous gas formed by the burning of carbon-based fuels, wood, coal, propane, natural gas, heating oil, gasoline and kerosene. Carbon monoxide (CO) blocks the body's ability to carry oxygen by binding to hemoglobin, the part of the red blood cell that normally carries oxygen.

The first symptom of carbon monoxide poisoning is usually a mild headache. Other symptoms include dizziness, nausea, vomiting, ringing in the ears, fatigue, drowsiness or sleepiness. Coma and death can occur in minutes or hours, depending on how much carbon monoxide is in the air.

Like smoke detectors that warn you when there's a fire, carbon monoxide detectors warn you when there are dangerous levels of carbon monoxide in your home.

It's recommended to have one carbon monoxide detector placed in a hallway or sleeping area. Look for detectors with the following features:

- An alarm that stops automatically within minutes when fresh air clears carbon monoxide.
- Manual Hush or Reset button to silence alarm briefly in presence of carbon monoxide.
- Digital display or warning light.
- Light to indicate power is on.
- Horn that sounds 85 decibel alarm in response to hazardous exposure.
- Test button to verify that the detector's electronics are working.
- With plug-in models, a power cord at least 6 feet long.
- With battery-operated models, a battery/sensor pack that lasts a few years.
- Underwriters Laboratory listing (or equivalent from American Gas Association).
- Look for an AC model that is also available in 12-volt version for recreational vehicles.
