ANSWER — Virginia Haines, Tabernacle, N.J., wanted instructions for making eggs look like wood. Thanks to Barbara Zuna, Hummelstown, for sending instructions.

Onion Eggs
 A dozen or more eggs (white ones are preferable)
 Dry onion skins (several cups)
 White vinegar
 Panty hose cut in large enough pieces to wrap each egg individually
 Foliage and/or stickers with distinctive shapes
 Rubber bands or twist ties
 Large saucepan
 Vegetable oil (optional)
 Choose foliage that has very distinctive shapes such as celery tops, parsley, carrot tops and ferns. Press a piece of foliage against uncooked egg and secure in place by wrapping egg with panty hose. Pull hosiery taut so onion skin dye cannot seep under foliage during dyeing process. Secure hosiery with rubber band or twist tie.
 Pack bottom of saucepan with several cups onion skins. Place wrapped eggs on top of the skins and cover with water. Add a small amount of white vinegar. Hard-cook eggs with onion skins.
 Unwrap eggs and remove foliage. Additional eggs can be dyed in the same water. Toss out with the skins; let the water cool, then boil eggs same as before. Stickers can be substituted for foliage. Wrap eggs to hold stickers in place or the cooking process will cause stickers to fall off.
 Store eggs in refrigerator when not on display. Use paper towel to rub each egg with a small amount of vegetable to make it shine.

The easy-to-read GreenStar display gives you instantaneous information — bushels per acre, area harvested, crop moisture readings, total weight, and more — plus a special "flagging" feature that lets you mark field variables such as weed patches.

No running around from one supplier to another for advice or support. There's even a toll-free number to call when you need some trouble-shooting. Plus, you'll own all the information you collect.

Capturing this year's site-specific data helps you plan for next year's profits. You can analyze the yields and performance of hybrids, seed rates, fertilizer, chemicals — all of your inputs. Quick-read maps provide precision measurements. Plus, while you're collecting yield data, you can easily flag areas of special concern — exceptionally weedy sections, standpipe locations, and more. Then in the future, you'll be able to fine-tune your inputs on each 1/100th acre.

This Combine Yield-Map System is the first of several GreenStar Precision-Farming Systems. All will be designed, supported, and sold exclusively by John Deere. See your dealer and find out how easily you can begin precision farming this fall by collecting site-specific information with your John Deere Maximizer or CTS Combine.
