

Candid Camera Captures Ag Progress

Clarence Berger, state director for Pa. Farm Bureau, comes to see new things and meet people.

Busy dishing up honey ice cream, from left, are Stewart Mathias, Hummelstown; Merle Fisher, Grandville; and Glen Snyder, Lewistown.

Ag Progress Days provides the opportunity for friends and neighbors to get together to compare notes and learn about the latest research projects and findings at Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences. On these photo pages, L. Ann Good, shows what her camera saw as she talked with many of the visitors on main street Tuesday. Other pages of Ag Progress photos can be found on Pages B1, B3, and B10. Photos by L. Ann Good.

Although no longer in farming, Richard Jamison still enjoys seeing the new equipment available. He and sons Jamie, 7, and Joel, 4, are from Indiana County.

Found at the booth of Pennsylvania Dairy Princess and Promotion Services, Inc. are Jan Harding, director; Angela Werley, state dairy princess; and Charlene Ranck, regional director.

Jim Houtz remembers his cultural business. He and his sons, Shawn and Aaron, 2, traveled from Clinton County to the farm life.

Ask the Experts if you have a question about trees, shrubs, insects, and other landscaping problems. Experts shown here are Don Smith, Bob Nuss, Greg Hoover, Mike Orzalek, Pete Feretti, Andrew McNut, and Jay Keller.

The spotlight is on snakes at the Snake Creek event.