

Detweiler Artifacts

account of preaching to the Native Americans in the 1740s; old guns; an 1859 issue of "The National Stockman Farmer" newspaper; and a set of chairs with original decorative paint that also belonged to Samuel's grandfather. Each chair brought $385 ($2,250 for the whole set). Another object of interest was a Mauser action 8-mm gun, painstakingly inlaid with deer, eagles, fox, and more by Samuel's father. One of Samuel's grandchildren bought it for $2,100.

Just as intriguing was the Detweiler collection of Native American artifacts from the 1700s and before.

"This is rare," Glick said, holding up a long, smooth object destined to sell for $6,500. "It's a 9-inch stone tube pipe." Later at the sale, a Native American artifact expert suggested that the piece could have been a javelin pipe. Native Americans may have strung a rope through it, then hurled it through the air.

Approximately 2,600 Native American artifacts, including arrowheads, stone pipes, axes, a stone bowl, an assortment of spears, and paint cups passed through Glick's hands during the auction. Four hundred forty potential buyers from eight states registered for the sale.

During the tour before the sale, Glick reached for one Native American paint cup in particular.

Samuel's son Joe said someone up the valley found this particular paint cup, still stained with red. Then, several years later, that same person found the lid. It sold for $5,500. Glick said Samuel sold more than 48 frames filled with arrowheads, averaging $260 a frame. The grandchildren bought about 25 of the frames while an Erie, Pa., buyers' bill totaled $11,000.

The list of rare objects in this estate was commendable. In a sizable family, though, an auction helps solve the problem of where to store it or how to divide it. But one thing is sure. Whomever placed the final bid on any object, whether family member or antique dealer, they truly know and can appreciate its historical worth.

Cooking For Crowd?

DAUPHIN (Dauphin Co.) — Are you a member of a church group, fire company, or public service organization that serves meals to a crowd? Cooperative Extension can provide updated programs for cooks, servers and organizers on the basics of safe food handling practices. A refresher on the basics of safe food handling could make the difference between a great fundraiser and a food poisoning outbreak that could damage your groups reputation and finances. Call the Dauphin County Extension office at (717) 921-8803, for a brochure.

Survival Course On Living With Teen-Agers

YORK (York Co.) — Do you, or the parents of teens that you know, sometimes wish your teens and pre-teens could be sent away for a few years and then returned to you as cooperative young adults? Or maybe, as the parents of teens, you and your friends just want some direction on how to guide adolescents through their most troublesome years. Well, now there's help — an innovative video based parent education program designed specifically for parents of teens and pre-teens. Called Active Parenting of Teens, the program is being sponsored by Penn State Cooperative Extension starting Monday, September 29 and continues through November 10 at Penn State Cooperative Extension, 112 Pleasant Acres Rd., York.

To sign up for Penn State Cooperative Extension's Active Parenting of Teens program, send your registration and check payable to Extension Service-Special Fund to Penn State Cooperative Extension, 112 Pleasant Acres Road, York, PA 17402. The cost of the program is $20 per participant, or $30 per couple. For more information call (717) 840-7408.
