(NAPS)—Contrary to popular belief, it's not necessary to have the kids say "Cheese" when you want to capture that perfect photo. So says Brian Miller, Director of Marketing for Samsung cameras. Lining up the kids and asking them to say "Cheese," more than likely, will give you a shot of a goofy smile with lots of teeth.

"Some of the best photos tend to be 'candid' photos, when the subject is unsuspecting," said Miller. But how do you get an unposed informal photograph? Samsung camera offers these five tips:

- Always keep your camera in an accessible place, such as a bookcase in the living room as opposed to a drawer in an upstairs bedroom
- Always make sure it is loaded with film and that the battery is active
- If you see a situation where you feel like saying, "Isn't that cute"—that's the time to quietly reach for the camera.
- Position yourself on the same level as the subject so that you'll be able to capture the facial expression. For example, if the child is opening a gift, you'll want to capture the expression just as the child discovers the contents.

• Call out the person's name. In order to get a great unsuspecting shot of a child playing with a pet or a toy, simply call the child's name and the natural instinct will be for the child to look up and towards you. Snap! The perfect photo.

"While posed family portrait photos are important and should not be underestimated, candid shots are the ones that tend to bring out that natural beauty of the subject," said Miller. "How many times have you used your video camera to capture a scene of an unsuspecting child playing? As soon as the subject knows you're taking the video, the entire scenario changes and the 'naturalness' disappears. The same is true when it comes to taking still photographs," Miller said.
