Beware Of Hantavirus

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Spring is upon us and the urge to clean cabins for the summer is growing stronger.

This year, with the death of two Pennsylvania residents from the Hantavirus, there is cause to be careful but not panicked. The cases, both in the Allentown area, were the first reported in the state.

Activities that put you in contact with rodent droppings, urine or nesting materials, such as opening up a camp or cleaning out buildings, could put you at some risk. Avoid touching rodent droppings and actions that would raise dust when cleaning.

The Hantavirus was first found in the Four Corners area of the southwest in 1993 when several young adults complained of acute respiratory distress and about half of them died. The virus has been confirmed in the deaths of 179 individuals in the last five years. Several species of wild rodents such as the deer mouse and the white-footed mouse have been linked to the virus. Contact with the virus-infected rodent urine, droppings or saliva could make you sick.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has a number of recommendations for prevention and control. They are simple precautions that most of us already follow in cleaning our homes and areas where rodents may have been.

First, exclude rodents from cabins and camps by blocking holes and filling cracks. Wash all dishes and utensils with hot soapy water and store your food in rodent proof containers. Air out buildings before you start cleaning and wear rubber gloves. Spray all materials or surfaces (wet thoroughly) where droppings and urine are suspected with a general purpose disinfectant; for larger areas, use a 10 percent household laundry bleach solution (1½ cups of bleach per gallon of water). Pick up the wet material with a damp towel and mop or wipe area with disinfectant. Bury, burn, or dispose of your cleaning materials in a proper manner. Disinfect your gloves before removing them and then wash your hands with soap and warm water.

The symptoms of the disease are somewhat non-specific and include fever, fatigue, muscle ache, dizziness, nausea or vomiting and may begin in one to five weeks. If symptoms occur, check with your physician and mention that you may have been exposed to rodent contamination. While there have only been two cases in Pennsylvania, more than 40 percent of the individuals who have contracted the virus nationwide have died. If you have any questions whatsoever about this virus, contact the CDC at the National Center for Infectious Diseases Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 1600 Clifton Road, NE Atlanta, GA 30333, (800) 532-9929. Internet address: <http://www.cdc.gov/ncidod/diseases/hanta> or your local health department. The CDC's materials are detailed and easy to understand and their web page has clear and current information.

The disease is rare, but it is important that people are aware of the potential when the urge for spring cleaning hits.
