Elizabethtown Fair Billboard Contest For 4-H, FFA, And Youth Groups, Organizations

The Elizabethtown Fair has announced the second annual Billboard Contest for youth groups.

The Fair is offering $200 to the 4-H, FFA, or other youth group or organization that creates the top billboard to publicize the Elizabethtown Fair.

The Elizabethtown Fair will supply each participating group with two sheets of plywood to complete their project. Each group will be expected to create a sandwich board to publicize the Elizabethtown Fair using their imagination and paint, decorations, etc. of their choice.

Materials used must be able to endure weather. The message on the boards must include (1) The Elizabethtown Fair, (2) The dates of the fair, and (3) the location of the fair.

The completed boards are to be placed along a busy road, in someone's yard, farm, or place of business, with the owner's permission and must be readable from the road. The boards will be judged for creativity, neatness, location and the message given.

Registration forms may be obtained by calling (717) 426-2940 or (717) 361-9016. All registrations must be postmarked by June 15 to the Elizabethtown Fair, P.O. Box 285, Elizabethtown, PA 17022. All billboards must be in place by July 21. To be judged, a picture of the sandwich board must be submitted by Aug. 1. The group or organization's name, address and phone number and location of the billboard are to appear on the back of the submitted photograph. First place billboard will be awarded $200, second place $100, and third place $50.

Bringing Temperatures Down Keeps Dairy Production Up

DES MOINES, Iowa — Keeping dairy cows from overheating during hot weather is a key to maintaining production levels and reproduction, a dairy expert from Kansas State University said.

"Heat stress can cause losses in production of 20 percent or more and reduce conception rates from 10 to 20 percent," said John Smith an extension dairy specialist. Producers need to look for ways to reduce that stress without adding significant costs to production, he said.

Dairy experts agree that heat stress for dairy cows begins to take its toll when the temperature/humidity index reaches 72 degrees. "The severity and duration of the heat stress is going to depend on local conditions. In some areas, heat stress is almost never a concern, and in others, it's nearly constant," Smith said. "That means the steps taken to reduce heat stress will be different on every farm."

In a presentation to researchers and extension specialists at the joint Midwest meeting of the American Dairy Science Association and the American Society of Animal Science in Des Moines, March 17, Smith outlines key strategies for reducing heat stress. He recommends adopting the recommendations in the order they're listed here. Each step to reducing heat stress comes with a cost, he notes, so producers need to carefully consider whether the benefits will justify the expense.

• First, provide adequate cool, clean water Smith said providing enough water for cows as they leave the milking parlor and in housing will go a long way toward keeping cows cool. Cows rely on evaporation of moisture from the respiratory tract and from sweating for cooling. In dehydrated cows, this natural cooling system is crippled.

• Second, find ways to reduce walking distance to the milking parlor. Minimizing effort helps cows keep their cool, Smith explained. And minimize time cows spend in the milking parlor's holding pen. "Those cows are like a bunch of large furnaces in a small room with no place for the heat to go," he said.

• Next, provide shade in the holding pen and in cow housing. Keeping the sun off cows can dramatically reduce temperature.

• Provide a holding pen cooling system and exit lane cooling. Smith noted that the holding pen and parlor are relatively harsh environments because of the amount of heat generated in that small space. Although fans and sprayers are expensive, keeping cows cool in the holding pen and cooling them rapidly as they leave the milking parlor may reduce stress enough to make those systems pay, he said.

• Finally, provide cooling systems in cow housing areas and along feedlines. Although this is the most expensive option for cooling cows, it may be necessary to keep cows producing at optimum levels.
