FARM FORUM

EDITOR:
The larger dairy farms are expanding while the smaller farms are going out of business. How would it work out if there were a two price system for dairy farmers with the smaller farmer getting cost of production and the larger farmers getting a floating price. The larger farms are very efficient and utilize modern technology. With higher prices and lower feed costs there will be a glut of milk. It is socially desirable to keep the smaller dairy farms viable. The larger farms are milk manufacturing facilities rather than true farms. The government controls milk prices with milk marketing orders, blend prices, transportation differentials, N.E. dairy compost. Why not help the smaller farmer. If the larger farmers were to realize their prices could drop substantially, it might slow their mass expansion race.
