developed concerning parenting, child care, financial management, foods and nutrition, and food safety. Resources included 1,600 copies of "Toddler Topics," more than 500 copies of "Visits With You and Your Baby," and more than 600 copies of "Family Time" were distributed to families in the county.

Additionally, Schwartz noted, "312 child care providers attended meetings to receive more than 780 Department of Public Welfare training hours, 12 food safety sessions were conducted for volunteer cooks, and 210 volunteers, representing church groups, fire companies, fair stands auxiliaries, and other community groups" attended the sessions.

Schwartz noted the strengths of the Master Gardener program, which has more than 90 active Master Gardeners. The gardeners donated more than 5,300 hours, which included answering home horticultural questions, plant diagnosis clinic, and other programs. Without their help, according to Schwartz, it would take more than two full-time assistants to do the same work.

There is a total of 138 4-H clubs in the strong 4-H program in the county, with embryology standing out in particular. And 4-H programming is continuing at Barnes Hall, the county's youth detention center.

In the county's traditional 4-H program, according to the extension director, the county teams placed first in state competition: the senior livestock, the senior meats, and the junior horse judging teams.

Through the Great Grain Adventure summer urban 4-H program in 1999, 128 inner-city youth took part.

"Cooperative extension, I feel, is aggressively developing educational programs to address the issues facing Lancaster County," Schwartz said. New educational efforts continue to improve rural and urban relationships, public policy, and environmental issues.

The treasurer's report was presented by Gary Dean, board of directors member. According to the county extension's annual report, state and federal government support for the county extension totaled $1.27 million with a 1999 budget of $437,000.

The monies available included $437,000 and $5,817 earned in interest.

For the year, expenses totaled $424,346. That left a total margin of $18,470, according to Dean.

Michelle Rodgers, Cooperative Extension Service capitol region director, noted that the service made a very successful request to the state legislature, coming away with $2 million in addition to the annual funding.

The funding has helped create three new positions in the capitol region, she said. They include a nutrient management specialist in York County, a heard health position in Lebanon County, and an integrated pest management staff position working for the green industry in Dauphin County.

Extension "has had a strong presence in our community," Rodgers said. They remain "on the cutting edge of the needs of communities."

There is also a vacancy for a dairy agent in Adams County, which the service is trying to fill.

Lancaster County, she noted, has a Website up and running. The Internet address is <http://lancaster.extension.psu.edu>.

New extension directors elected at the meeting included the following:

- Northwest: Harry E. Hershey Jr., Mount Joy. Hershey manages a poultry farm. He is married to Joan and they have two children, Steve and Sharon.

- Northeast: Ernest W. Mast, Morgantown. Mast operates a grain crops, vegetables, and beef farm. His wife is Rhonda and they have two children, Gavin and Nicole.

- Southwest: Wilmer L. Shertzer, Columbia. Shertzer operates a dairy and livestock farm. Shertzer is married to Esther and they have three children, Beth, Mark, and Sam.

- Southeast: J. Ray Ranck, Paradise. Ranck manages a poultry farm and used to operate a dairy. He is married to Reba and they have three children, J. Robert, Rhonda, and Ryan.

- Southern: Dorothy I. Strickler, Quarryville. Strickler manages bee hives. She is married to Samuel and they have three children, Matthew, Sara, and Amy.

At the meeting, Nellie Cruz, secretary, was honored for 10 years of service to the county cooperative extension.
