Victory Gardener Coming To Gettysburg

GETTYSBURG (Adams Co.) — Roger Swain, host of TV's "The Victory Garden," will be the featured speaker at the Oct. 21 Rites of Fall gardening seminar sponsored by the Adams County Master Gardeners.

Swain, now in his 13th year as host of the popular show, will discuss fall gardening tips that will help ensure a better garden next spring.

In addition to doing his TV show, Swain is a prolific and widely read writer. His books — which he will be available to sign — include "Earthly Pleasures: Tales from a Biologists Garden," "Field Days: Journal of an Itinerant Biologist," "The Practical Gardener," and, most recently, "Groundwork: a Gardener's Ecology."

Richard M. Koogle of Lillypops Water Gardens is also on the program. He will discuss "The Fall Water Garden" and answer questions about this rapidly growing area of gardener interest.

Koogle, who has appeared on "Good Morning America," and the "Fox Morning Show," is an adviser for Ortho's "Garden Ponds and Fountains" and Taylor's "Weekend Garden Guide." He has lectured extensively before the American Association of Nurserymen and other professional organizations.

In addition to the keynote speakers, experts will conduct several educational workshops. Educational hour credits are available for Master Gardeners.

The 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. seminar will be at the new Adams County Agricultural and Natural Resources Center in Gettysburg. Seating is limited and participation in this third annual event is by advance registration only.

A $35 fee covers all costs including a continental breakfast, lunch, and refreshments.

For more information and registration materials, call the Adams County Master Gardener Program at (717) 334-6271.
