

Tough Competition, Top Animals at Lebanon Fair

steer classes. Angus producer Greg Krueger judged the event.

"We didn't have excessive numbers today but we did have good quality," Krueger said of the heifer classes.

"We also had an excellent set of steers. The quality was good in all classes," said Krueger.

He also mentioned out that the fair's shows provided an opportunity for participants to learn responsibility and good sportsmanship. Pointing out the younger participants in the ring, Krueger mentioned that they were the "bright young future" of the cattle industry.

The classy black and white outfits worn by all of the exhibitors set the tone in the dairy show.

"There was lots of depth of quality in all classes," said Holstein judge Terry Rawn. "In this case (Lebanon's Fair) 8 to 10 to a dozen were really good, particularly in the milking classes. I don't think there was a cow that anyone would be ashamed of. They had good udders and the capacity to give lots of milk."

According to Rawn not only the animals but also the participants were outstanding. "The exhibitors were very courteous, polite and showed good sportsmanship. They obviously had gotten a lot of training," said Rawn. A regional sales manager for Alta Genetics, Rawn, who lives in West Virginia, has judged cattle since college.
