BEEF TIPS

Pennsylvania Bull Test - Year 2000

The top two bulls for average daily gain for the 1999-2000 Pennsylvania Bull Test were a Black Angus and a Black Simmental with both averaging 5.3 pounds of average daily growth. The differences between the two animals included this significant number: the amount of backfat on each animal. The Angus had .39 inches of fat on its back, while the Simmental bull, owned by John Myers, had only .30 inches of backfat or 25% less. It is this muscle growth, leanness, and cutability that many commercial cattlemen look for when they cross-breed continental breeds such as the Simmental breed with the English breeds. Simmental breeders are now breeding their Simmental animals to make crossbreeding easier and safer with Angus, Herefords, and Shorthorns.
