

NCGA Calls For StarLink Decision Based On Sound Science

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — The Star-Link saga continued recently with a U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Scientific Advisory Panel (SAP) hearing to discuss Aventis' application for a temporary exemption for Star-Link in food.

Rick Tolman, executive vice president and CEO of National Corn Growers Association (NCGA), said he association is urging EPA to make a decision based on sound science.

"It's in the best interests of our 32,000 members as well as all of U.S. agriculture and our international customers that EPA make this decision on sound science," said Keith.

"NCGA has always supported the strict and stringent U.S. regulatory process that approves the safety of biotechnology and other products. This is another step in the process and we're ready to support a decision based on hard data, not just a hot debate."

Tolman noted that the Star-Link issue has neither hindered nor helped the development of biotechnology.

"Biotechnology still offers farmers and consumers opportunities to address key problems such as insect control in crop production and food processing," Tolman said. "For almost three years, the NCGA's position has been that farmers need access to this technology and to use it when and where it makes them more profitable."
