

Where Family And Vegetables Flourish

About 130 laying hens provide brown eggs for customers

Weeding is never ending, but the bean patch is near the stand and allows Shirley to assist customers if needed.

"When I had more time," Weaver said he made this sign with a jig saw. The sign can easily be added to or deleted to show passersby what's available.

About 30 goats of mixed breed are pampered by Sherri, Anne, and Gwen before being sold for the meat market. The girls name all the offspring and can easily name each one.

and May to home school and work at the market. The state requires 180 days of homeschooling and that is important," she said.

Although she did not grow up on a farm, Shirley has adapted well to what she calls "never ending work."

She said, "We grow produce so that other people have healthy choices, but we are so busy I find it difficult to find time to preserve food for our own family."

She said of their roadside venture, "We are thankful to the Lord for protection and the beauty of nature. It's hard work, but enjoyable."
