sends all culled animals directly to the slaughterhouse.

Boyce brings the freezer beef animals into a small paddock to be fed on dry hay and a small amount of grain to get rid of any garlic taste which may linger in the animal. Any young animal not part of the breeding program goes into the freezer beef category.

Additionally Boyce, a grazing consultant and hay equipment specialist, sells fencing systems and seeds from the farm.

Project Grass Expands Eastward

Project Grass, a grazing program originally implemented in the western part of Pennsylvania, recently expanded to include 11 new counties from the central and eastern part of the state.

The counties comprising the new Project Grass Central Pennsylvania Chapter are Clinton, Union, Snyder, Mifflin, Juniata, Perry, Cumberland, Adams, Franklin, York, and Lancaster.

Suzette Brought, Fulton County, was named grazing coordinator for the new central Project Grass region, which increases the total number of Pennsylvania counties in the project from 18 to 29.

Project Grass works with farmers and diverse agencies to provide farm management and cost share services to grazing system managers. Representatives from the project will visit farms and provide free consultation on how grazing and other practices can fit into their farming operation.

For more information about Project Grass, call J.B. Harrold at (814) 445-8979 or Candace Burke at (724) 295-4928.
