Nineteenth century game boards were usually made of maple and pine by untrained amateurs as well as skilled artisans. They were rarely signed or dated. "They were yet another way for artists to express themselves," said Hamilton.

Playing board games goes back to antiquity. In those days lines were probably drawn in the earth and instead of checkers, bones, stones, and shells would have been used. The earliest board games documented go back to the reign of Amenemhet 111 in Egypt (1841-1797 BC). Their boards were of ivory and other luxurious materials.

The checkerboard is one of the earliest board designs - in fact, one of the earliest designs other than scrollwork and floral motifs. The charm of the early checkerboards, Parcheesi and backgammon, is their primitive, "handmade" look. When bold colors and geometric forms are combined in a Parcheesi or backgammon board the initial reaction is that they look like an example of modern abstract art. Maybe they are what inspired artists Piet Mondrian and Paul Klee?

Commercially made games became popular after 1850. As a result, fewer were made by hand. However, many handmade game boards were handsomely made into the early 19th century. They can fetch top dollar.

Most game boards were painted. However, an interesting addition to a game board collection would be a carved checkerboard. These sometimes turn up and were made for blind players.

Some game boards were painted on both sides. Because they are less common, even the least interesting are seriously collected.

CLUES: As Martha Hamilton pointed out, "there are reproductions of checker and Parcheesi boards. A careful examination of the paint can determine age. However, the fakers these days are very skilled at aging."

A beginning collector should look for a signature or date incised or painted on the back. Color is important and adds to the value. Boards with blue or red painting sell for more common black and white examples. Look for fine details and unusual and aesthetically appealing designs.

The original design should be in good condition with minimal, if any, restoration.

Antiques Questions And Answers

Can you give me an idea of value for this eight-piece "Seller's" kitchen cupboard set that included cupboard, two side cabinets, table and four chairs. They are dated on the back "1936." The cupboard has a flour bin, porcelain pull-out work surface, tin lined with tin pull lid in bottom drawer. In good shape. J.B. - Danville, IA

Price depends a lot on where you live. At auctions outside of large cities, your set could find a buyer for $800 to $1,500.

These armchairs, with backs with a carved man's head, smoking a pipe, were brought from England by my great grandmother approximately 160 years ago. Similar pieces were written about in Hobbies magazine in 1969, and referred to as tavern chairs. They were in the Falstaff Museum in St. Louis that no longer exists. Since I would like to sell them, I'd like an idea of value. A.S. - Naples, FL

Your 19th century pub chairs could sell at auction for $700 or more apiece. Send photo to Furniture Expert, Slogan's Auctions, 8861 NW 18th Terrace, Sloan's Miami, Suite 100. Miami, FL, 33172.

I have a ceramic vase shaped like a pitcher. The background color is in gold with a light coat of pale blue over it. It is marked on the bottom "Stangl Pottery, Trenton, NJ." Is it worth anything?

F.G. - Hollywood, FL

Collector interest in pottery from the 1940s, 50s continues to grow. Stangl Pottery produced bird and animal figurines as well as dinnerware and accessories. Your decorative pitcher could sell in a shop for $50.

I am wondering if my old black metal stove is worth anything. It is stamped 1900 on the inside and Thatcher on the outside. It has lots of gilt trim.

A.D. - Staten Island, NY

Your highly decorated c.1900, wood-burning stove would have collectors fighting over it for several thousand dollars.

I have this document signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, to Anning Prall of New York, when the Senate appointed him a member of the Federal Radio Commission in 1934. Is it of any value?

A.J.F. - Staten Island, NY
