Great Lakes Dairy Sheep Symposium To Be Conducted On Cornell Campus, Nov. 7-9

ITHACA, N.Y. — The eighth Great Lakes Dairy Sheep Symposium will be conducted on the Cornell University campus, Nov. 7-9. The charter meeting of the Dairy Sheep Association of North (DSANA) is planned concurrently.

As demand for sheep milk and cheeses increases, dairy sheep breeds are becoming better established in North America and are improving rural economies. "The Great Lakes Dairy Sheep Symposium is the unique annual event for transmitting information among dairy-sheep farmers and sheepcheese makers," says Michael Thonney, Cornell professor of animal science. "Because there are many other avenues to learn about general sheep management, we're keeping the focus on information about sheep dairy-

New York state is home to Old Chatham Sheepherding, the largest sheep dairy in the United States. Several smaller sheep dairies are located in the state, and two of these will be featured on the symposium tour Satur-

The registration fee for the three-day symposium is $100, with a reduction to $75 for those joining DSANA ($50 annual dues for charter membership). Additional family or farm members will pay a reduced registration fee of $60. Registration includes lunches on Thursday and Saturday, a lamb barbecue on Thursday evening, the cost of transportation for the Saturday tour and refreshments during the breaks. The Friday banquet is $25 per person.

Complete information about the symposium, including a brochure and registration form, is available at the Cornell Dairy Sheep Website at http://www.sheep.cornell.edu/sheep/ dairysheep/ or by contacting Mike Thonney, 114 Morrison Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, NY 14853-4801.
